According to Google, 129,864,880 million books had been published as of 2010. That number is obviously a lot higher now.

- Author's names didn't used to be printed on the covers of their books.
The covers of the first printed books were considered artworks. They were covered in drawings, leather and even gold — so there wasn't a place for the author's name.

- The first book ever written using a typewriter was The Adventures of Tom Sawyer.
Mark Twain must have had a lot of ink and a lot of patience.

- Alice in Wonderland is based on a real 10-year-old girl.
Her name was Alice Liddell, and her family was close friends with author Lewis Carroll.
